Sadat omitted at the last minute a powerful call for Palestinian rights from the text of his address at the White House ceremony. His speech as delivered made no specific reference to the Palestinians, although the prepared text distributed to newsmen earlier had contained a strong appeal to President Carter and the U.S. to support the Palestinians' aspirations for "selfdetermination and statement" and to ensure the full implementation of the autonomy plan.

Two hours later the president's spokesman, Saad Zaghloul Nassar, said Sadat's omission had been inadvertent. He said two pages of the speech had been stuck together and the president had turned them both

But some observers wondered whether Sadat's omission of the passage had nevertheless been a deliberate reaction to a noisy demonstration by Palestinian students and supporters, whose chorused slogans could be clearly heard during the ceremony. The demonstrators were kept by police about 300 metres away from the White House grounds.

While Sadat made no reference to Begin, but dwelt on President Carter's role in "performing the miracle," the Israell leader paid generous tribute to Sadat as a man of . 'great civil courage" and referred to him as "our friend."

But Sadat did have praise for "the hundreds of thousands of Israelis who remained unwavering in their commitment to peace" - a clear reference to the "Peace Now" movement which, Sadat believes, had a major impact on Israell policymak-security one iota, he added.

It was Israel's first-ever peace treaty with a neighbouring Arab state.

The signing represented the dramatic culmination of 16 months of arduous negotiations beginning with Sadat's visit to Jerusalem in November 1977. All three men, during their remarks delivered at the simple but moving one-hour ceremony, stressed the significance of the occasion, but they also acknowledged the pitfalls on the road ahead.

President Carter's remarks were carefully uncontroversial. But he underscored "the obstacles that lie ahead" and added: "We must rededicate ourselves to the goal of a broader peace with justice for all who have lived in a state of conflict in the Middle East,'

Carter called on other Arab states to join the peace process. "I am convinced," he said, "that other Arab people need and want peace; but some of their leaders are not yet willing to honour these needs and

The omitted passage from Sadat's address asserted that "no one is more entitled to your support and backing than the Palestinian people. A grave injustice was inflicted upon them in the past. They need a reassurance that they will be able to take the first step on the road to selfdetermination and statehood. A dialogue between the U.S. and the representatives of the Palestinian people will be a very helpful development... We must be certain that the provisions of the Camp David framework... are carried out. There must be a genuine transfer of authority to the Palestinians in their land. Without that the problem will remain unsolved.'

But Sadat did remind President Carter of his piedge that "the U.S. is committed without reservation to seeing the peace process through, until all parties to the Arab-Israeli conflict are at peace."

Begin's speech was in many ways the most moving — certainly the most personalized — of the three. He recalled his parents who had perished in the Holocaust, and his voice almost cracked as he declaimed in sonorous tones the words (in Hebrew) of Psalm 126.

Begin spoke of the peace treaty as "the cornerstone of cooperation and friendship" between Israel and Egypt. He, alone among the three leaders, did not dwell on the challenges and difficulties that still lie ahead, nor refer to their common pledge to reach a comprehensive settlement that would embrace Israel's other fronts.

There was, however, one common reference in all three addresses:

Begin raised the only laugh during the hour-long ceremony when he said he agreed with Sadat's praise of Carter as the "unknown soldier" 'but, as usual, with an amendment.' Carter's efforts for the peace would be "remembered and recorded for generations to come," he said.

When the prime minister spoke of the day Israel took the Old City as the 'second greatest day" of his life, there was applause only from a group of American Jewish leaders sitting together to the left of the signing dais. Most of the audience reacted in stolid silence. They seemed to feel that in making this remark Begin was uttering a pledge, on this most solemn occasion, that Jerusalem would remain reunited under Israel's rule at any cost.

The ceremony started exactly on schedule. Between 1,200 and 1,500 people gathered on the front lawn of the White House and heard the three leaders — "the president of the United States of America, the president of the Arab Republic of Egypt, and the prime minister of Israel" introduced. There was steady applause as the three men walked ogether, Carter in the middle, to the heavy table and sat down behind three microphones. All three were Afterwards the Israeli and was seen singing along in Hebrew and later Carter in English. Sadat's lips did not move during the Egyptian anthem.

It was probably the last major occasion for the Egyptian anthem, since a new one has been commissioned by Sadat and is expected to be released shortly.

The U.S., Israeli and Egyptian flags flapped in the steady breeze behind the three men under partly sunny skies. It was chilly outside temperatures hovering in the mid-50s (about 13 centigrade). Throughout the ceremony the constant chanting of protestors, who had assembled across Pennsylvania Avenue, could be heard. They had interspersed themselves among the (Continued on page 2, col. 5)

Israel and Egypt will start two months after the peace treaty is ratified and El-Arish is handed over to Egypt. Prime Minister Menahem Begin said yesterday. He was briefing the Israeli press in Washington four hours after signing the peace Begin said it could take up to three weeks for the Egyptian Peoples Assembly (parliament) to ratify the treaty because of precedural complications, Israel, Begin said, could ratify the treaty within a day. Begin said that in the last two days of talks with President Jimmy Carter and administration officials the U.S. had given Israel a firm com-mitment that it "won't tolerate violations of the treaty...It is clear that the reference was not to Israel but to other bodies." Begin said the U.S. commitments included a promise to ensure arms supplies to Israel in the event of war. an assurance that the U.S. would

"atep up its presence, in the area" and take action to lift naval blockades, and that the U.S. would block attempts to subvert the treaty in the UN Security Council. Negotiations with Egypt over the form of the autonomy to be granted to the West Bank and Gaza Strip will start within seven to eight weeks, Begin said. The talks will start after instruments of ratification are exchanged and after Israel's ministerial "committee of 11" prepares detailed proposals for autonomy as Israel envisages it. Much of the credibility of the anti-Egyptian camp depends, however, on Saudi Arabia, whose position was swinging between maintaining economic ties with Egypt and joining other Arabs in imposing comprehensive sanctions against Cairo.

Syrian Foreign Minister Abdul-Halim Khaddam tried to dispel doubts in the rejection camp about the Saudi stand by telling Kuwait's "A-Siyassa" daily that Damascus

Begin, Sadat split differences

By WOLF BLITZER

Jerusalem Post Correspondent WASHINGTON. - The final act leading up to yesterday's peace treaty signing was filled with all the intense drama which has typified the last 16 months of the budding Israeli-Egyptian dialogue.

HOME NEWS

In the end, just hours before the deadline, President Sadat and Prime Minister Begin broke through the last barrier in the best Middle East tradition of marketplace diplomacy. As they have done so often during these hectic months, they split their differences and compromised.

As they went into their "unprecedented" (Begin's word) encounter on Sunday night at the Egyptian embassy in Massachusetts Avenue's posh diplomatic row, the world took one last gasp before learning some three hours later that a compromise had been reached on the exact timing of the Israeli withdrawal from the Sinai oil fields and the subsequent supply of Sinai oil to Israel.

Secretary of State Cyrus Vance. who has been instrumental in nurturing the U.S.-sponsored mediatory process, made it official as he and Foreign Minister Moshe Dayan met outside the Washington Hilton Hotel with anxious reporters.

Both Vance and Dayan were beaming as they spoke. But neither agreed to provide details of the deal. Only later did Israeli and Egyptian sources come forward with the information. While neither side contradicted the other, there was a clear slant to each version. For obvious and understandable reasons, both parties were trying to give the impression that "the other side" had made the last concessions.

Both sides confirmed that the withdrawal from the Sinai fields would take place seven months following the signing ceremony. Going into the final session, Israel had pressed for a nine-month pullback. Egypt wanted the oil fields evacuated after six months.

But they then went on to stress different related points. The Egyptians insisted that Israel had agreed to move up its withdrawal from El-Arish to two months after the signing, rather than the earlier-agreed three months. They also said that Begin had agreed to the long-standing Egyptian request to offer the Palestinians a "good-will gesture" by releasing some prisoners from West Bank and Gaza jails and easing restrictions on political freedom and movement.

Prime Minister Begin signed in Hebrew and English and President Sadat in Arabic and English, with President Carter signing as a witness in English. The documents note that each text gathered near the White House to try to catch a glimpse of the historic event. The demonstrators were not large in their numbers but they were noisy. Their interruptions, however, did not appear to make any dent on Carter, Sadat or Begin. After the anthems the three leaders sat down, Carter in the middle, to begin the formal ceremony. There was another sustained round of applause before U.S. chief of protocol Kit Dobelle announced the various signings Begin and Sadat signed the first document, the set of agreed minutes explaining the various understandings among the parties to the clauses and articles in the peace treaty. After signing this document Begin in Hebrew and Sadat in Arabic — there was more applause. Begin clapped his hands. The second document was also signed by Sadat and Begin, this one involving the agreed side-letter on the proposed negotiations for the West Bank-Gaza autonomy scheme.

The third and final signing involved the actual treaty - three copies in three languages. The legal advisers from the three delegations—Herbert Hansell of the State Department, Meir Rosemé of the Possion the Foreign Ministry, and Ahmed Fouad Teymour, the grand chamberlain of the Egyptian presidency - who had played an important role during the lengthy over u brought the documents to the table for the signing.

When the signing concluded, Carter told Sadat and Begin: "Let's have a handshake." They stood and clasped hands. They smiled and were clearly pleased. There was no embrace at that point, as had been the case last September when they met to sign the Camp David framework agreements.

"I'm so proud of both of you,"
Carter said as he held hands together with the two men. Each man then read prepared speeches, sitting behind the microphones. They were each interrupted repeatedly by enthusiastic applause. Begin's speech was considerably longer than the other two. He put on a kipa as he began to read from Psalm 126 and continued to wear it for a brief period after the ceremony as all three men strolled into the crowd to shake hands.

Sadat embraced and kissed his wife Jihan and his children as well as former secretary of state Henry Kissinger and later President Carter. He also hugged Defence Minister Ezer Weizman and poignantly -- Weizman's son, Shaul, who had been injured during the war of attrition along the Suez Canal. of the State of Israel out of a sense of justice in our cause and with great sacrifices for our reborn homeland. A generation passed until Egypt recognized our existence and the power of our presence in the Land of Israel However, there are still enemies around us who refuse to accept our right to a homeland. At this time 30 years ago, the cease-fire agreements were signed, the first of them with Egypt. After a difficult war which made our dream of independence a reality, this agreement generated great hopes for stability and quiet, to allow the young state to absorb immigration, consolidate its society and develop an economy as in other countries.

After 30 years of struggle and war together with building up the state, it -seems we have come full circle. A peace treaty with Egypt will give new impetus to our society, economy, aliya and immigrant ab sorption, education and settlement. We again face these tasks. Tasks that will always have starting points and trajectories, but we shall never reach their end. This is a constant climb up a steep slope, with no summits. This is a stubborn movement in a circle on which historical milestones are scattered, but which has no end, needs no end and should not have an end. We shall turn to the peace with Egypt and fortify our position on our belligerent eastern

Our strength is within us, in our nation, in our faith and in the justice of our generation's presence in the Land of Israel, which is ours for eiernity. Let us lower our flags and remember the heroes of Israel, who gave their lives for the establishment of this state, and whose heroic inspiration brought us this far.

Meshel warns of dangers of rapid Negev buildup

By Joshua Brilliant Jerusalem Post Reporter

TEL AVIV. - The Negev buildup will spur inflation and widen social gaps unless other econonic activity is curbed. Histadrut Secretary-General Yeroham Meshel said yesterday.

Addressing economic reporters here, Meshel said that Prime Minister Menahem Begin should convene the employers and the Histadrut and plan how to prevent profiteering from the expected expenditure of more than $3b.

There are not enough workers in Israel to build the new airfields, West Bank settlements and low-cost homes in Israel, he explained. Contractors in the Negev would rather pay local workers $200 a day than import foreign labour, he said. Thus, Israeli workers will be enticed away from export-oriented factories. Their higher earnings will increase consumption and spur inflation. But because only a few workers will get the huge salaries, the social gaps between them and the others will

"You can destroy a country by bringing prosperity to only a few."

In reply to a question, Meshel said he thinks it "is not good" to bring Egyptian workers to Israel; but "this is a very delicate question (and) I don't want to go into it."

Meshel cautioned against attempts to send large numbers of Israeli technical experts to Egypt. Egyptian trade unionists (whom he has met through the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions) expressed concern over a possible Israeli influx. "They don't want an invasion by an Israeli salvation army," he said. Meshel also said he believed that in fiscal 1979/80 inflation might rise as high as 70 per cent. The Histadrut is demanding an increase in the costof-living allowance and fully linked income tax brackets. At present the income tax brackets are pegged to 70 per cent of the index, so employees find theemselves in higher brackets just because they receive compensation for price rises. In its struggle with the government over this issue, the Histadrut may wage selective strikes but will not paralyse the economy by calling a general strike, he added.

'Daily Mail' says Carter wants London to supply Israel with 'emergency' oil

By HYAM CORNEY

Jerusalem Post Correspondent LONDON. — U.S. President Jimmy Carter has made a secret request to British Premier James Callaghan to supply Israel with North Sea oil in an emergency situation, according to the main story in vesterday's "Daily Mail" by its normally reliable diplomatic correspondent, John

Dickie. But authoritative British and Israeli circles are dismissing the

A spokesman for Callaghan told The Jerusalem Post yesterday that he had seen "no trace of any such request." Israeli sources also deny knowledge of any such "dramatic approach" and tend to believe that there is nothing of substance in the report. According to Dickie, Callaghan feels that the American request has landed him with "a cruel dilemma."

Callaghan has kept in close touch with both Israel Premier Menahem Begin and Egyptian President Anwar Sadat since the Middle East peace negotiations got under way and has urged everyone to give it a chance. On the other hand, he is well aware of the damage which could be caused to Britain and its standing in Arab countries, wrote Dickie.

There have been earlier reports that Israel has itself directly approached the British authorities about the availability of North Sea oil. The first feelers were put out more than a year ago but did not receive great encouragement.

According to Israeli experts, however, North Sea oil is the wrong type for Israel's needs and would have to go through an expensive process before it could be of real use. Furthermore, it is pointed out, the oil is comparatively expensive.

Mood is reserved prior to peace

Jerusalem Post Staff

Signs of festivity or excitement were conspicious by their absence in most of the country yesterday morning as residents went about their daily business apparently unmoved by the prospect of peace with Egypt. Those who expressed an opinion viewed the signing of the peace agreement with reservation, if not with a measure of ap-

The apparent apathy of most Tel Aviv residents was in contrast to the feverish preparations for showy mass celebrations and extravagant balls to be held at Kikar Malchei Yisrael and in the bailrooms of the plush Sheraton and Hilton Hotels.

In the afternoon Jewish and Arab high school pupils were shown films at the American embassy promoting peace and understanding between Jews and the Arabs. At Tel Aviv's wholesale market venders said they were pleased about the peace agreement. "Peace is always good. I think this is a good development," one vender said. Another, a kiosk owner, said he did not intend to go to the organized celebrations. "But I do feel the need to celebrate. So I'll just take my girlfriend out," he said.

A Ramat Hasharon school invited 100 pupils from the Arab village of Taiba to participate in a happening." The children sang peace songs in Hebrew and Arabic and after doves were released the Taiba pupils had lunch at their hosts' homes.

In Haifa, Jewish and Druse workers at the port's con-tainer terminal held a spontaneous peace celebration during their breakfast break yesterday morning. The men invited port manager Moshe Haral to come along and toast peace with them. The Jewish workers toasted in apirit. The Druse, whose religion bans alcoholic drink, filled their glasses with fruit juice.

is usual yesterday, uncertain how one celebrates peace. There was an increase in radio listening, but otherwise everything continued as usual. The rainy weather did nothing to raise spirits.

Many settlements in the North were decorated for the peace ceremonies. In Metulia, a large bonfire spelling out the word "Shalom" was lit on neighbouring Mt. Tzilya, which is near the "Good Fence" along the Lebanese border. It was expected that the bonfire would be visible deep into Southern Lebanon.

Yesterday morning Southern Lebanese militia com-mander Major Sa'ad Haddad sent a congratulatory message to Washington to Presidents Carter and Sadat and Premier Begin, "from the citizens of free South Settlers in the North were on high alert against possible terrorist action. Yossi Goldberg, chairman of the Metulla Local Council, said jast night that he hoped the children of the region would be able to view the treaty signing on television at home and not in shelters.

The mood among settlers in the Jordan Rift on the signing of the peace treaty and the approach of autonomy was one of apprehension. Esti Marial, secretary of Moshav Massua, told The Jerusalem Post that while there were differences of opinion among the moshav members about the agreement, all were worried about what autonomy

t mean in practice. Mariai told The Post that there would be no celebrations in the moshav to mark the treaty signing. We shall be watching the television and hoping that it does not mean the end of our settlement," she said. Kiryat Arba, the Jewish settlement at Hebron, was celebrating a wedding last night at the time of the treaty

Signing.

One of the settlers, Pamela Klein, told The Jerusalem Post that the mood in the district was one of confusion. There was disappointment at the extent of Israel's concessions but at the same time a feeling that "all is not lost." The autonomy plan could work, she said, "provided the Jews living in the areas involved are treated as part of the autonomous system." After all, she added, the residents of Kiryat Arba have been living in proximity to the Arabs of Hebron for 11 years.

Soggy Jerusalem unwarmed by signing

Jerusalem Post Reporter

The heavy cold rain that sporadically snarled traffic and soaked pedestrians in the capital yesterday seemed to match too well a sombre mood of uncertainty and exhaustion at the end of a 31-year wait for a peace treaty with an Arab

The lousy weather began at dawn with heavy thunderclaps over the city's centre announcing the historic day. While the media were filled with an exuberance over what should have been Israel's biggest story since the founding of the state. Jerusalem residents seemed bewildered by their own lack of enthusiasm.

Newspaper venders, huddled under plastic awnings along the city's main streets, seemed more lonely than ever as they shouted out the "Signing Today" headlines. Few people paused as they hurriedly threw down some coins and stuffed the newspapers into their satchels. They seemed to be buying the newspapers, or listening to the radio reports from Washington, out of a sense of duty rather than excitement.

In cases, the treaty signing was discussed. But drinks on the house — common during the historic visit to Jerusalem of Egyptian President Anwar Sadat 16 months ago - were not offered. Instead, a tired and news-satiated clientele talked about other times. "We danced in the street when the state was

knew what would happen the next day, but we danced and sang and drank that night."

"It's the same now. We don't know what will be. But if you ask me, even if I was younger, I wouldn't feel like dancing," his grey-haired companion said. "Sometimes I just feel like going to sleep, and when I wake up, it will all be over and everything will be different. That's what I always thought peace would be - everything different. Now, it's just words, words, words.

The two men went back to their discussion of the treaty's intricacies, apparently too cynical after 31 years to believe peace was finally at the

"When I woke up this morning and listened to the news, I suddenly realized: it's finally going to happen and, dammit, I should be happy. But I'm not, and I don't know why," said Yossi Cohen, a restaurant owner in the centre of town. His wife, Michal, stepped out of the kitchen and, wiping her hands on her apron, said "It's an anticlimax. Now it's only for the politicians."

Even the planned celebrations seemed less than spontaneous. Unprecedented security at the Western Wall was slated for last night's peace prayer rally. Hundreds of policemen, border police and soldiers were perched on rooftops surrounding the wall's plaza. The narrow alleyways in the neighbourhood were heavily guarded in case Arab youths protesting the treaty repeated the weekend's stone-throwing incidents.

municipality's call to deck their windows withflags and pennants. Afternoon newspapers had in recent days included special glossy photographs of the three heads of government signing the treaty. But the few scattered countenances of U.S. President Jimmy Carter, Premier Menahem Begin and President Anwar Sadat were unnoticed by the city's residents scurrying through the rain.

Jerusalem's Plaza Hotel scheduled a party at the next door Independence Park, which was to include Arab musicians, belly dancers, and Israeli folksinging and dancing. But grey skies and a cold wind dulled the festivities' impact. "This should have been a great day."

At Cohen's restaurant a patron asked whether there would be any parties. The owner shook his head. "Maybe tonight we'll take out some bottles of wine. But parties? I don't think so. We'll play the radio if the customers want. But what is there to celebrate — a victory of punctuation. I'll party the first night I go to Cairo, when I can see the Nile without an army uniform. That's when I'll know there's peace.'

Performers from 10 of the 19 competing countries, wearing costumes but not made up, took part in the first day of rehearsals for Saturday night's international competition.

Most of the music coming out sounded like the homogenized tunes prevalent in popular music, and most of the accents - whether in French, Spanish or other languages than that of last year's Eurovision," said Yitzhak Graziani, the veteran Israeli conductor who has taken part in several of the international popular song festa. Graziani diplomatically declined

Opec weighing further oil price hike this year

GENEVA (Reuter). — An overwhelming majority of OPEC states yesterday emerged in favour of an immediate oil price increase beyond levels already set for this

Saudi Oil Minister Ahmed Zaki Yamani told reporters at the start of OPEC talks here that his country would do its best to resist pressure: to increase the price of a standard barrel of OPEC oil beyond $13.843. the level officially due to take effect

The conference has been called to discuss the repercussion of oil ahortages caused by the slowdown in Iranian production.

Last December, OPEC set a four-stage price increase of 14.5 per cent for the whole of 1979. Prices are due to rise 3.8 per cent on April 1 But Qatar Oil Minister Sheikh Ab-would easily absorb such a rise. Iraqi Oil Minister Tayeh Abdel-Karlm called for a reasonable increase to offset the effects of inflation — and he also hinted that the Arab oil countries could use oil as a weapon to punish participants in the Egypt-Israel peace treaty.

A senior Iranian official said that Iran is seeking a 20 per cent in-crease. Cyrus Zadeg, adviser to the head of the Iranian delegation, Finance Minister Ali Ardálan, told reporters that at least four or five of the 13 Opec states had expressed support for the move.

He said this would bring the price of a standard barrel of Opec oil to $17 or $18, compared with the official price of $13.335 in force since January 1.

The OPEC ministers had a television brought into their conference room last night to watch a live transmission of the Egypt-Israel peace treaty signing ceremony in Washington. They concluded their round of talks to watch the broadcast.

The caller told the AP that the explosions were the beginning of an offensive by the group, known as the "Omega 7," against organizations it sees as friendly to Cuban President Fidel

Castro.

Bombs went off at the offices of the New Jersey Cuban Refugee Programme in Weehawken and the Elmaceen Pharmacia in Union City, which police said sends medical supplies to Cuba. At Kennedy, a suitcase exploded in a Trans World Airlines baggage area minutes before it was to be placed on a flight to Los Angeles, police said. An air-line official said that the bomb would have caused substantial damage had it detonated inside the baggage compartment of the Jet, which was carrying 181 people. TWA has operated flights to Cuba.

The "Omega 7" terrorist group, made up of Cuban exiles, has been active in the New York City area during recent months, most recently on December 29, 1978, when it claimed responsibility for explosions that caused extensive damage at the Cuban mission to the UN and lesser damage to Avery Fisher Hall at Lin-coln Centre.

French gov't suffers blow in provincial poll

PARIS (AP). - French voters handed President Valery Giscard d'Estaing's ruling centre-right coali-tion a significant rebuff on Sunday, electing some 189 new Socialist and Communist representatives to statelevel governing councils.

With all but 10 of the 1,846 districts reporting, the three main component parties of the president's ruling coalition had won 900 seats, a loss of 156 seats in the general councils that run the nation's "departements," or ballotting that began last weekend was the Socialist Party, which overcame months of bitter in-fighting to win 557 seats, an increase of 158. Socialist leader Francois Mitterrand, who is locked in a threeway fight for control of France's largest party, called the Socialists' showing "a great success; superior to what was expected." Hin B'. France's Communist Party, continuing the electoral success it began in the 1977 municipal elections, won 225 seats, an increase of 81 seats, according to the nearly final results.

The big winner of the two-stage

What the French press called "the leftist push" is expected to result in at least eight new presidencies for the left when the 1,846 districts choose new leaders tomorrow. The other half of the nation's cantons chose their new six-year representatives in 1976. Giscard d'Estaing's own Union for

French Democracy won 429 seats, 62 fewer than before. The president's Gaullist partners, led by Paris Mayor Jacques Chirac, won 198 seats, a loss of 41. Other groups in the roling coalition, elected in a national poll last March, lost another

Though many parliamentarians also seek district office in the cantonal elections which are often called France's "school of democracy," the results usually have little impact on the 592-seat National Assembly. Nevertheless, this year's poll was being carefully monitored for signs of further erosion of support for Giscard's government and its economic policies.

One bright spot for the govern ment was the election of the president's elder son, Henri Giscard d'Estaing, from the canton near the family chateau in Authon, southwest of Paris. ## Syria grounds U.S. flight for violating its airspace

NICOSIA (AP). — A Pan American jumbo jet bound from New York to Saudi Arabia was ordered to land in Damascus yesterday for allegedly violating Syrian airspace, but was allowed to resume its flight three hours later, officials reported.

U.S. officials in Washington, asking not to be identified, said reports had been received indicating that the jetliner, carrying 88 passengers and a crew of 16, had been ordered to land in Damascus by Syrian officials by radio from the ground.

The duty officer at the control tower at Damascus airport, in confirming the plane had taken off at 1848 GMT (6.48 in Israel), said the pilot had been ordered to land because he had flown over a "prohibited area" of Syrian

Am normally flies through Syrian airspace on the New York-Dhahran flight 24, a non-stop flight. At the State Department, officials said there was no indication that the incident was related in any way to Syria's opposition to yesterday's signing of the Israeli-Egyptian peace treaty. They said that staff members at the U.S. embassy in Damascus immediately went to the airport upon learning that the plane had been ordered to land there, about 9.40 a.m. local time.

Mario Sarcinelli, 45, vice-director since 1976, was arrested on Saturday and spent the weekend in Rome's Regina Coeli prison. The arrest, ordered by a magistrate investigating the affairs of a troubled chemicals group, immediately sparked off a wave of protest.

The bank's entire board of governors has threatened to resign uniess Sarcinelli is released.

Newspaper editorials attacked Magistrate Antonio Alibrandi for ordering the arrest. The right-wing 'Il Tempo'' said the order was irresponsible, while the communist daily "L'Unita" described it as a turbid political manoeuvre.

President Sandro Pertini met Baffi vesterday in what was seen as a sign of support. Well informed sources said the president was alarmed at the possible damage to the bank's prestige. But they added that the bank had received many messages of solidarity from banks and finance institutes abroad.

THE PEACE TREATY is not the end of this chapter. We must still prepare ourselves for a tough campaign and fateful negotiations over the future of Judea, Samaria and Gaza. For Jerusalem, too, there will be a hard struggle. The Jewish people will have to gather all the strength of its convictions and beliefs to prevail in this struggle. But now, it is important for us to realize that peace is a challenge that we will have to stand up to. Until now, we have been educated in a situation of slege and war. Now, we will have to prove our worth and the worth of our social and human

Peace must not lead us to lessen our responsibility, wakefulness and commitment to pioneering, Zionism and settlement. On the contrary, it must be strengthened.

We wanted peace not in order to live an easy life but in order to prevent the spilling of blood and to free ourselves for the realization of the values and goals for which the Jewish State was founded. With the coming of peace, we shall have to grapple with our Judaism, not because we were forced to by our enemies, but of our own free choice and will. Therefore, together with our effort to build close and fraternal relations with our neighbours, we shall also have to strengthen our separate Jewish identity, our social and cultural heritage. We are also forbidden to lessen our military vigilance and preparedness. We must not deceive ourselves that the threat from without has disappeared, Our love of the Land of Israel and our links with the Diaspora must also be renewed and

ALL THESE VALUES must be instilled through our educational system. And it is especially the pupils — who will constitute "the first possible generation of peace" — who should, rather than occupying themselves with celebrations and ceremonies for peace, face up, in a responsible and serious way, to the true nature of peace with its challenges and risks.

The peace treaty has been accompanied by explosions and disturbances in Jerusalem and by threats by several neighbouring Arab states. That is to say, it still does not promise us complete security. But our signature to it shows us the right way ahead. It symbolizes our desire to change what has been our hope and belief that the future will be different from our memories of the past. It gives us a chance of peace.

The process has begun. The road is still long and holds further tests that will require courage and strength if we are to succeed. But something important has undoubtedly begun. We shall hope and pray that God will give courage to His people, that He will bless His people in peace.

The leader of the Egyptian people, the largest of the Arab nations, and the Prime Minister of Israel will set their hands to a document which will symbolize the end of bloodshed, suffering and devastation and the inception of an era of hope. light and construction.

This is neither a partial agreement nor an interim agreement, but a peace treaty. It is not a separate agreement, but a first agreement, which will be followed — as we all desire and hope - by further agreements with the other neighbouring Arab states. On this occasion, Egypt has again been a leader and trail-blazer in the Arab camp, as she has always been in every sphere. I regard it as a duty and an honour to express here our profound esteem to the noble Egyptian people, which has decided to direct its steps and apply its energies to the creative future and to leave the bitterness and suffering of the past to be swept away for ever by the waters of the Nile to the great sea.

The Egyptian people has done this under the leadership and inspiration of Mohammed Anwar el-Sadat, who has succeeded, by his bold actions and his farsightedness, in writing a new and brilliant page in the history of his people and the entire area.

PEACE HAS BEEN the heart's desire of the State of Israel since its foundation. The idea of peace has been deeply implanted in the heart of the Jewish people throughout its annals. The peace agreement has been made possible by Israel's readiness to make many painful sacrifices for its sake. She has deliberately and consciously accepted many risks in order to enable the tender sapling of peace to flourish and bear fruit. WASHINGTON — Last Friday was a hectic day for Arthur Rovine, who works in the State Department's Office for Treaty Affairs. There are so many details...
On the telephone during what should be his lunch hour, he was

'Yes, a Hebrew text has just been brought in to us by the Israelis, and the translators are busy right now comparing the Hebrew and Arabic texts. The Egyptians have their own Hebrew expert, and he's busy examining the Israeli text. The Israelis' Arabic experts have aiready looked over the Egyptians' text, and they are discussing some small discrepancies."

The treaty looks like a slim, very elegant book, bound in blue morocco with a triple gold stripe running around the edges of the cover. The inside of the cover is lined with white silk, and as of Friday afternoon, the 20-odd pages of the English-language text were held together by the rings of a loose-leaf binder.

"Sometimes we use the ribbon and seals, and sometimes we don't," Rovine says. "It depends on what the what the Israelis and Egyptians prefer. We do have wax and a metal stamp to make an impression on it, in case that's what they want." Ribbons and sealing wax — to bind the pages in order — are still popular forts to the achievement of this sacred goal.

The two nations have been assisted by a third party, the President of the United States, Mr. Jimmy Carter. who has spared no trouble and effort in order to enable the parties to overcome difficult and complex problems. At times it appeared as if we had reached a blind alley, but the strong and sincere will of the peoples drove the chariot of peace forward towards the final goal.

Ladies and gentlemen, the peace treaty that will be signed this evening is a historic event, but peace is a continuous process. It has to be built with endless patience through reciprocal compromise, abandoning previous ways of thought to which we have been accustomed for decades. The time has come for the great and historic sulha, the reconciliation, between the Semitic peoples. The time has come for the peaceful meeting between the Arab national movement and the national movement of the Jewish people.

From this place I appeal to the honourable Arab kings and presidents to hearken to the footsteps of history, which sound a new music today. This region has tried the paths of hostility and war. That way has solved nothing; it has only multiplied devastation and blood, graves and ruins. The new way. although it is not free from obstacles, is destined to produce a solution to the problems and lead the great Arab nation forward to a future of happiness and creativity. The caravan of peace is on the march. Let us not cast stones at it: on the contrary, take your place in it and give it your blessing - and he that blesses shall be blessed from Heaven. The younger generations are entitled to know and feel that their lives will no longer be sacrificed in endless and senseless battles. They are entitled to know and feel that a new horizon, full of hope and happiness, opens before them.

AND TO MY BROTHERS, the Arab inhabitants of Israel, let me say:

You, who have been living in Israel as equal citizens for over 30 years. you know our country and its institutions: you are an integral part of them. You know the people who live in Israel and its sincere yearning for peace. You yourselves have prayed for peace all these years.

You have it in your power to play an honourable and important part in the creation of a fitting atmosphere for peace. Part of the disquiet that has been your lot is due to the state of war that has always reigned between Israel and her neighbours. With the coming of peace this dis-quiet, too, will be removed. You are a firm bridge to peace. I am confident that your distinguished qualities and your great energies will find new and constructive channels in the new era of peace.

At this hour I call upon all the populations ulation of the West Bank and the Gaza Strip to open their hearts and to look forward with hope and optimism to the new move. The peace treaty with Egypt has not neglected you. It has been agreed between the parties that, in the framework of autonomy, you shall play a practical part in the determination of your future and fate. You have an important part to play in the building of peace. Not the rule of one people over another, but mutual understanding and cooperation. The bitter past must give way to a hopeful future, for the sake of a better life for your children and grandchildren.

LET US WORK TOGETHER for a future of construction and not destruction; planting and not cutting down; prosperity, not poverty; creation, not devastation.

If the will exists, all those words will be transformed into a living and substantial reality.

I pray to the Creator to plant in our hearts this will, for He answers those where traditional ceremony is treasured, or where the level of mistrust is high: some Latin American countries and the Soviet Union, for example. The National Archives has some treaties with the Soviet Union on which the signers have initialled each page — a practical problem when the treaty is very long and in two languages.

The typed text of the treaty (if time permits, treaties are sometimes printed before being signed) will be the final reference: in cases of divergence between the Arabic and Hebrew versions, the English text will prevail. For the signing a historic mahogany table used for some notable treaties in the past was dusted off. It was used in 1898 for the treaty ending the Spanish-American Pact, which condemned war as a means of settling international disputes: in 1972 for the signing of a part of the first Salt agreement; and in 1976 for a treaty with the Soviet Union on the peaceful use of atomic

Nothing special was planned in terms of pens and ink, except to "assure that the signature will dry immediately - we don't want any blots on our treaties," Rovine explained. "Otherwise, there is no set procedure. Sometimes the pens are kept as souvenirs — or people just take them as souvenirs — and sometimes they don't." In this age of jet-propelled diplomacy the physical form of treaties has changed. But this process began long ago — in 1873, as a matter of fact, when Hamilton Fish, President Grant's U.S. Secretary of State, discovered how much it cost to use skippet boxes, elaborate containers for sealing wax, to ensure the integrity of a

'Woodrow Wilson took it home with him when his administration ended, Gustafson says," and for a while nobody noticed that it was gone. Then Harding's secretary of state, Charles Evans Hughes, couldn't find it, and he asked Wilson about it. Wilson said yes, he had it and would be glad to return it if they would send a messenger for it and give him a receipt."

NBA West race tightens

NEW YORK (AP). — Suddenly it's the wild, wild West in the National Basketball Association with just 61/2 games separating the top seven teams, one of which won't make the playoffs.

Seattle has the best mark in the conference, 46-27, following Sunday's 111-101 victory over Kansas City. The Denver Nuggets climbed to within one-half game of Kansas City by rallying to beat the Los Angeles Lakers 123-113 on Sunday. Portland, which lost to Milwaukee 122-110 in overtime on Sunday night. now finds itself the odd team out in the West race. The Blazers are onehalf game behind surprising San Diego in the battle for the sixth and final playoff spot.

In other games on Sunday, the Phoenix Suns beat the Golden State Warriors 111-95, the Washington Bullets topped the Detroit Pistons 116-107, the Indiana Pacers defeated the San Antonio Spurs 121-113, the Boston Celtics downed the Philadelphia 76ers 103-94 and the New Jersey Nets beat the Chicago Bulls 99-98.

Seattle guard Gus Williams matched his career high with 38 points as the Sonics won their fifth in Denver's Charlie Scott scored a season-high 28 points against his former Los Angeles teammates. But it was David Thompson who keyed a third-period surge with 9 points as the Nuggets erased a 6-point halftime deficit with a 48-point quarter. Brian Winters scored 7 of his 24 points in overtime as Milwaukee outscored Portland 17-5 to win only its seventh :game on the road this Phoenix outscored undermanned Golden State 16-2 in a 51/2-minute span of the middle periods to break

By STEVE KAPLAN Post Sports Reporter

Ramat Gan Hapoel's basketball team gained a dramatic, come-frombehind victory on Monday night at Yad Eliahu, beating Tel Aviv Hapoel, 83-78, to even the best of three semi-final playoff series at one win for each team.

After losing its first game against Tel Aviv last week by a 77-74 score Ramat Gan Hapoel badly needed a win to keep its championship hopes alive. Ramat Gan came out strong and held an early 20-14 lead, but Tel Aviv rallied behind the strong rebounding of Bob Fleischer and John Willis. The Tel Avivians went into the locker room at halftime with a 41-36 lead and had the game well under control.

The two teams will meet for the third and deciding game of the series this Thursday at Yad Eliahu with the winner going on to face Tel Aviv Maccabi for the league championship.

Ramat Gan cagers | Overseas players signing-up for J'lem tennis competition

By JACK LEON -Post Sports Reporter

TEL AVIV. - A dozen overseas players, including entries from Malta and India, have so far registered for the Israel Tennis Association's (ITA) 10th International Spring Circuit, which opens in Jerusalem on April 9. Also due is former longtime Rumanian Davis Cup racquet Petre Marmureanu, for what will be an unprecedented ninth visit here during the past decade.

The circuit, consisting of four tournaments, will be worth nearly $7,500 in prize money. However, the cash awards are limited to men's competition only, in accordance with a decision made months ago when the event was planned. This ruling now appears particularly unfortunate, as the women's entry looks like being considerably stronger than the capital's YMCA courts and Kibbutz Dan in Upper Galilee, the circuit moves to Ramat Hasharon for the 45th annual Pessah International Championships. It closes with an invitation tournament at Haifa's Carmel Country Club, ITA General. Secretary Zvi Meyer told The Jerusalem Post yesterday.

The spring tennis season will already swing into action during the first week of April, with the commencement of the traditional Pessah Junior Championships at Ramat Hasharon. A record 400 boys and girls have registered for the tourna. ment, as compared to an entry of only 280 last Pessah.

the establishement of élite Jewish commando units as the apearhead of the eventual Jewish army, whose creation he foresaw.

Wingate was given his chance by his commanding officers in the spr-ing of 1938. The Arab rebellion in Palestine was bewildering the largest military concentration in the British Empire and was having a disastrous impact on British prestige throughout the Middle East. Wingate was given permission to set up and train his famous Special Night Squads, despite the "political undesirability" of giving Jews guns as far as the British were concerned. Never more than 150-strong at any one time, the SNS were recruited from Hagana kibbutzniks and included British NCOs (Wingate had a preference for men with Scottish and Northern Irish fundamentalist Protestant backgrounds). Their main period of activity was from May to September, 1988, during which they had a shattering effect on the rebellion.

Wingate took his military doctrings and training procedures. straight from the Bible. His military models were Joshus Gi-its deon, and David. From them, he learnt the importance of always taking the offensive, of always relying on an elite group of soldiers spiritually motivated and trained to the hilt, of attacking by night, of travelling light and fast, and of intimately knowing the land his soldiers fought over. He took from Oliver Cromwell the watchword: Know what you fight for and love what you know."

AS PART OF a general tendency to belittle him as a "wild man," British military historians have argued that Wingate's role in bringing the Arab rebellion to an end has been much exaggerated. It is certainly true that after he left and the Special Night Squads stopped operating, reorganized British forces under Generals Sir Richard Haining and Sir John Dill, backed by a highly efficient intelligence operation, had great success in breaking the back of the terrorist gangs and rounding them up. However, Wingate's squads had started operating at the nadir of Jewish and British military fortunes — and they not only dealt devastating blows to Arab morale, but also showed the way for future military operations. The British administration, alarmed at Wingate's extreme Zionism and close contacts with Zionist leaders, pulled him out of Palestine. He never returned. During World War II, there was a standing rule in the War Office that he should never be posted there again. But the seeds he had sown were already sprouting. Among the young sabras who had served in the Special Night Squads were Yigal Allon and Moshe Dayan, The tactics and principles Wingate taught were enthusiastically embraced by Yitzhak Sadeh and his Palmahniks and came to guide the Israel Army for over 20 years.

Wingate himself was determined to come back. Addressing his friends in the stilted Hebrew he had taught himself in the library of Kibbutz Ein Harod, his pockets filled as usual with a pistol, a flask of whiskey, and a Bible, he told them: "I leave you with a heavy heart. But rest assured that the day will come when I shall return to you and we shall fight together for the common cause.'

When war came, he was taken under the wing of General Sir Edmund Ironside, Chief of the Imperial General Staff, and then of Winston Churchill himself. Wingate rose from captain to major-general in five years. He organized and led small-scale units to shatter against enormous odds - Italy's East African Empire in 1941 and put a somewhat bewildered Emperor Haile Selsassie back on his Ethiopian throne.

Wingate's 1943 "Chindit" commando operation behind the Japanese lines in Burma suffered heavy canualties, but caused heavy distributed with paved the way for a larger operation the following year: when he died.

Although still the subject of intense controversy among British scholars, Wingate's second Chindit campaign is generally considered by Japanese historians to have been of pivotal importance in deciding the battle of imphal Imperial Army was finally driven back from the gates of India and suffered its greatest land defeat in 2,600 The unidentifiable remains of Orde Wingate were buried with the American crew of his plane in Washington's Arlington National Cemetery. His death was one of those rare moments that might be said with confidence to have changed the course of history. Had he lived, there is no doubt that he would have strived to fulfil his desrest ambition — to lead a Jewish army in battle. A fitting dream for the man they called hayedid — "The Friend."

Lea Levavi describes an art show for the blind and sighted More than what meets the eye

BLINDNESS is a most unlikely subject for an exhibition in an art gallery. But that is what Haim Maor, a 28-year-old kibbutznik artist and art teacher has produced.

The works, on display at the Kibbutz Art Gallery (25 Rehov Hoz) until Saturday, are designed to appeal, in different ways, to both blind and sighted visitors.

Most of the works can be appreciated by touch. All - even photographs and other purely visual forms - have braille inscriptions. And for blind visitors who do not use braille, tape-recorded catalogues and explanations are available. Maor is particularly interested in conceptual art and the relationships between forms of communication, which means that many of the works require explanation.

MAOR SAID invitations to the exhibition were sent to every blind person in Israel, but only a handful had attended since the exhibition opened on March 12.

In addition to the exhibit itself, the gallery has organized a series of lectures on various aspects of

Dr. Abraham Benjamin, a blind psychologist, opened the series with general introduction to the subject. He said he had three fantasies: to be able to read any book he wished when and where he wished; to be able to drive, and to be able to see

"I'm always amazed by the eye. and sighted people are equally amazed that someone without eyes can do even simple things like dress himself or eat," he said.

WHAT DO YOU do with the parsley

That's not enough. Parsley, which is as much vitamin C as oranges and twice as much iron as spinach. It's also a natural breath freshener (for

"The difference is that when I am amazed by the eye, I am putting the sighted person on a pedestal, and the person who is amazed by me is really saying that he thinks I'm helpless and inferior and that, therefore, every little thing I do is a major accomplishment." Society, he said, was willing to give blind people special privileges out of pity, but if the blind wanted to be integrated, they should think again about whether they wanted these privileges.

"I was automatically exempted from army service because I'm blind, but after that the army has called on me to do work for them and has paid me.

"They could have received the same work free if I were in the reserves. I'm sure there are others among the blind in the same LATER LECTURES dealt with

"seeing above and beyond" (parapsychology and positive thinking as a means to "seeing," other than through the eyes), sociological aspects of public reaction to the handicapped, and demonstrations of new technological aids for the blind. The aids demonstrated include the Optacon, a machine which enables a print by reproducing the letters in tactile form. Another reading machine, the Visualtek, is a closed-circuit TV system, enabling those with some vision to read oridinary print by blind person to "read" ordinary magnifying it hundreds of times. The solar cane, whose "beep" sounds tell the blind user whether the obstacle in his path is a tree or a curbstone, was shown, too. Maor also demonstrated video tapes that he made based on Picasso's Blue Period pictures of blind people.

HE EXPLAINED that his grandfather, Ephraim Ruter, was blinded by the Nazis and later formed the Association of Blind Victims of the Nazis in Israel.

"I led him around from the time I was eight until I was 18, and he exerted a lot of influence on me." said Maor.

Because of his grandfather, he became acquainted with many blind people, institutions for the blind and public attitudes toward the blind. Later his interests expanded to "political and social blindness," represented in his exhibition (among other ways) by quotes from "The Emperor's New Clothes."

He used a variety of materials in his work, including metal and wood in one piece to obtain different temperatures, and satin in another with religious connotations. The Central Library for the Blind transcribed all the texts and catalogues into braille, and its direcor, Uri Cohen, who is himself blind. provided enthusiastic support for the exhibition.

The items cost between IL200 and IL10,000 and, said Maor, the prices merely covered his expenses

He will not be disappointed, however, if the works are not bought: "My purpose here wasn't profit, but trying to do something of social significance."

Loss of Iranian market not critical, Soltam manager says

Money Matters

By MARY HIRSCHFELD Jerusalem Post Reporter

HAIFA. -- "Losing our Iranian market is not the catastrophe everybody is talking about." Soltam general manager Ya'akov Lior told The Jerusalem Post this week." We have coped with worse crises in the past and will also find our way now."

Speculation about the company's future started a few weeks ago, following reports that some 500 employees had been dismissed as a result of the suspension of exports to Iran. "This is not true. We have let go some 170 employees until now, most of them temporary workers. and it is regrettable that the whole matter became public," said Lior. Our business is not a "steady stream" one, he explained. The industry has always fluctuated between periods of intense activity and those of virtual standstill. Soltam expanded twoo quickly, as orders from Iran grew bigger. "What we have to do now is to trim some of our lines and our personnel, so that we can go back to more realistic proportions. But again, this is not an unusual event for us.'

Ya'akov Lior was appointed to Soltam a year and a half ago, following a career of 35 years as manager at the Military Industries. A lifetime of dealing with security matters taught him how to shelter the Yokne'am plant from indiscreet eyes. Unlike other companies in the trade, Soltam has no public relations office or spokesman, and does not en-courage visitors. "We cannot allow ourselves to be bothered by rumours or react to them. Ours is such a sensitive business that anything we say may eventually turn out to be harmful," Lior said.

Soltam was founded in 1950 by Solei Boneh and Tampella, a Finnish group with multinational interests (hence the name Sol-Tam). It started as a low-profile plant with 200 workers, until three years later.

when the first big orders started arriving — from Germany.

"We now employ 2,580 persons, including production and engineering personnel" Lior told The Post. The company has reached an international-quality level and has been marketing its products in 40 countries. More than 80 per cent of last year's production went for export, and of this total some 17 per cent was bought by Iran."

The Iranian market did not open up until two or three years ago. This is why we say now that we have lived without it for so long, we shall overcome its loss without difficulties, Lior said. "In 1956, as a matter of fact, our weapons industry suffered a much worse crisis and we learned to cope with it in due time also."

The best answer to the present situation is diversification. Soltam already manufactures stainless steel cooking pots and pans, which have been very successful. "Whatever we produce has found its way in the local market," Lior said, but "strong international competition has kept us from markets abroad."

One item has been conspicuously missing here: a Soltam pressure cooker. Yet this won't be for long, because the company is already studying the subject and will soon conduct a market research to know how the public feels about it. At present, Soltam production lines include complete weapon systems of guns and mortars together with sight instruments and accessories and various types of ammunition for them, ranging from high explosive, illuminating, train-ing and smoke projectiles. For the civilian market it manufactures automotive parts, track chains and cylinders and has not long ago launched a new line of duplicators.

Soltam was a Finnish-controlled company until two years ago, when it was purchased by the Koor group. It was about then that business grew

Egg prices to drop today

By MICHAL YUDELMAN

Jerusalem Post Reporter TEL AVIV. - The price of eggs is expected to drop by an average of 30 per cent today, Tnuva spokesman Mordechal Hofsteter predicted yesterday. He said that since the subsidies on basic foodstuffs, including eggs, were cancelled recently, there has been a major accumulation of surplus eggs. As a result of this surplus the organizations involved in the marketing of eggs have agreed to the government's demand to lower prices at the wholesale level. The demand has been supported by the government's readiness to absorb the egg surplus. Hofsteter said the new lower egg prices will hardly cover the costs of chicken-feed and will also not cover the agricultural work invested by farmers. As a result, Hofsteter predicted heavy losses for chicken farmers. The spokesman also said that within a few months the sharp decrease in production will create a severe shortage of eggs. This will require largescale egg imports and also cause local prices to rise. According to Hofsteter egg prices as of this morning will range from IL1.32 for the largest size (after IL2.05 yesterday) to IL0.80 for the small size (after IL1.11 yesterday).

The yield reflects the difference between the "theoretical" value of bonds — based on the date of issue and current Co-L indexes plus accumulated interest — and the actual market price. It is based on the assumption that future Co-L index increases will be zero. A negative yield indicates bonds sold at a premium, a positive figure bonds sold at a discount!

The turning point

THE SIGNING ceremony is now ended. Such pomp and circumstance as attended it are faded. Peace between Egypt and Israel, mortal adversaries for over a generation, is now a fact, though for the moment only on paper. The order of the new day is sober application to the arduous task of turning it into a

This will take some time. The daily lives of Israelis will not suddenly be set aglow with the kind of majesty that some of them still recall having felt when statehood was proclaimed nearly 31 years ago.

In the short run, the advent of peace will for the most part spell higher prices, heavier taxes, and perhaps longer reserve duty to help the army keep its time-table for a pullback from

Instead of beating its swords into ploughshares, Israel will be called upon to strengthen its defences. For while it is still too early to write off the southern front as a possible theatre of war, it is not a minute too early to take measures to ward off threats to the east and north.

The threat, as they see it, of Egypt finally and irrevocably opting out of the offensive Arab coalition has stirred the rejectionists among Israel's neighbours into a fresh frenzy of activi-

In truth, of course, the reason Egypt's President set out alone on his journey to peace with Israel was because neither Syria's Assad nor Jordan's Hussein would join him on that momentous enterprise.

Unlike his brethren, Sadat came to realize that the peace he, for one, sorely needed to lift up his people had to encompass something better than non-committal non-belligerence. Sharply breaking with a tradition informed by a genocidal impulse, Sadat therefore proposed a peace that is defined, in ultimate terms, as friendship and good-neighbourliness.

It remains a complete antithesis to the "comprehensive" peace seemingly espoused by the rejectionists. Will President Sadat stand up to his Arab foes? That is inevitably a major concern for Israelis.

Admittedly the pressures brought to bear on the Egyptian leader are enormous, and they have at times caused him to waver somewhat in his resolve. There is the threat of a cut-off in financial aid by the oil-rich countries, notably Saudi Arabia; there is the possibility of almost total political isolation in the Arab world; and there is the danger of upheaval by Khomeinistyle Muslim fundamentalists.

If Sadat remains firm — and his courage has been amply demonstrated — he will find compensation enough for any Arab losses in the peace with Israel and in his alliance with the U.S. (provided, needless to say, that the U.S. itself does not prematurely start chasing the chimera of overall settlement). If he does not, he may undermine the very structure of the peace.

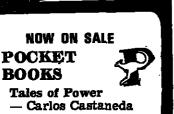

Like Anwar Sadat, Menahem Begin, too, has his share of home-grown rejectionists who speak his erstwhile rhetoric of illusory omnipotence. Israel's Premier ominously reverts to that language when,

for example, he refers to a peace made not by the State of Israel, which is the case, but by the Land of Yisrael,

The hope of peace may be blown to smithereens if Israel's rejectionists are let loose over the Land. It has taken Israel and Egypt 16 hectic months to negotiate the peace treaty, with America's invaluable assistance. Much remains to be settled; indeed some of the toughest and most vital issues, and not the autonomy alone, are only now to be tackled. As it is, the treaty may have in some eyes — perhaps also because of the merciless kicking around it has been receiving on all sides on its way to the signing — a lean and hungry

Now it is up to Egypt and Israel to flesh it out, and to make itsufficiently resilient to withstand all assault. For a new era of peace, dreamed about for so long, beckons to both peoples. With resolve and good will it can be made to illuminate the future.

CAIRO. — Separate peace: comprehensive settlement. The dichotomy has been with us ever since President Anwar Sadat's visit to Jerusalem. And it will continue to pre-occupy us beyond this week's treaty-signing, through the talks on the autonomy, through the talks on the "permanent status" of the West Bank and Gaza, for as long as one can contemplate.

In fact, it did not originate with Sadat's visit, just as the "peace process" itself did not begin then, but rather back in 1975, at the time of the Sinai II agreement.

Already then there were cries of "separate peace" and "betrayal" from the Arab hard-line states.

And, of course, they were right to an extent. Former Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin, who, with U.S. Secretary of State Henry Kissinger and Sadat laid the foundations of the peace we are now celebrating, used to speak openly of the political and strategic imperative of negotiating with Egypt first. It was only when Egypt responded, cautiously in 1975 then dramatically in 1977, and was assailed by its sister Arab states, that it became tactically imperative not to talk in such terms.

The Kissinger-Rabin Egypt-first strategy has been successful because it was anchored in, and aided by, objective reality: Egypt's critical socio-economic need for eace; Egypt's martial prowess at the start of the 1973 war, which erased its earlier shame and enabled it to negotiate confidently; America's newly perceived need to bolster a pro-Western axis in the Middle East: Sadat's ouster of the Soviets and his

Reflections by the Nile

DAVID LANDAU, The Post's Diplomatic Correspondent, feels that this week's historic event should be seen in the context of thousands of years of Jewish history.

enthusiastic response to American

There have been propitious catalysts, too, that have sped the peace process towards success. Begin's ascent to power meant that Israel was more forthcoming on the Sinal than it probably would have been under Labour.

A man in a position to know once said that Labour — and Rabin in particular — was "obsessed" by Sharm e-Sheikh. The party's "oral law," requiring that Sharm and a land link to it be kept at all costs, was not an opening position for negotiation: it was meant seriously. And can anyone imagine Yigal Allon as foreign minister consenting to remove the Rafah settlements with Menahem Begin, not just Geula Cohen, in opposition?

And a cloud with a silver lining was the fall of Iran.

This had been preceded by numerous Soviet-inspired encroachments elsewhere on the periphery of the Middle East; but it was Iran that set the warning lights flashing even among the trendy liberals on Capitol Hill. The Administration was galvanized into one final concentration of superpower energy and prestige to capitalize on the fast-receding success of Camp David. And Congressional money was demonstratively jingled in readiness to fund the effort.

The Egypt-first strategy, then, has proved to be the wise, fortunate and successful course for Israel, Egypt and the U.S. Soon, as we all know, the three parties will embark on the next phase, all avowedly determined to show that Egypt-first does not mean Egypt-last, but, on the con-trary, is the only possible way towards a "comprehensive settlement"

BUT SITTING HERE, watching the Nile dreamily flow by, I am moved to pause, just for brief moment. before we plunge into the maelstrom of negotiation again over the "comprehensive settlement." and reflect upon the "separate peace."

I am prompted to indulge just fleetingly in metaphysics: not what Dr. Butros Ghali calls metaphysics the tortuous arguments over Article 6, Paragraph 5 - but in an emotive, Jewish metaphysics brought on, I suppose, by being an Israeli alone here in Cairo on the eve of the treaty-signing.

Excerpts from Sadat, Begin, Carter speeches at ceremony

SADAT

President Carter, dear friends: This is certainly one of the happiest moments in my life. It is a historic turning point of great significance for all peace-loving nations.

Those among us who are endowed with vision cannot fail to comprehend the dimensions of our sacred mission. The Egyptian peo-ple, with their heritage and unique awareness of history, have realised from the very beginning the meaning and value of this endeavour. In all the steps I took, I was not performing a personal mission. I was merely expressing the will of a nation. I am proud of my people and of belonging to them.

Today, a new dawn is emerging out of the darkness of the past. A new chapter is being opened in the history of co-existence among nations, one that is worthy of our spiritual values and civilization. Never before had men encountered such a complex dispute which is highly charged with emotions. Never before, did men need that much courage and imagination to confront a single challenge.

Never before had any cause generated that much interest in all four corners of the globe.

Men and women of good will have laboured day and night to bring about this happy moment. Egyptians and Israelia alike pursued their sacred goal undeterred by difficulties and complications. Hundreds of dedicated individuals on both sides have given generously of heir thought and effort to translate the cherished dream into a living reality. But the man who performed the miracle was President Carter. Without any exaggeration, what he did constitutes one of the greatest achievements of our time. He devoted his skill, hard work and, above all his firm belief in the ultimate triumph of good against evil to ensure the success of our mission.

To me, he has been the best companion and partner along the road to peace. With his deep sense of justice and genuine commitment to human rights, we were able to surmount the most difficult obstacles. There came certain moments when hope was eroding and retreating in the face of crisis. However, President Carter remained unshaken in his confidence and determination. He is a man of faith and compassion.

Before anything else, the signing of the peace treaty and the exchanged letter is a tribute to the spirit and ability of Jimmy Carter.

We are also heartened by the understanding of hundreds of thousands of Israelis who remained unwavering in their commitment to peace. The continuation of this spirit is vital to the coronation of our ef-We realise that difficult times lay ahead. The signing of these documents marks only the beginning of peace, but it is an indispensable start. Other steps remain to be taken without delay or procrastination. Much will depend on the success of these steps. We are all committed to pursue our efforts until the fruits of the comprehensive settlement we agreed upon are shared by all parties to the conflict. President Carter once said that "The United States is committed without reservation to seeing the peace process through, until all parties to the Arab-Israeli conflict are at peace."

We value such a pledge from a leader who raised the banners of morality and ethics as a substitute for power politics and opportunism.

The steps we took in the recent past will serve Arab vital interests. The liberation of Arab land and the reinstitution of Arab authority in the West Bank and Gaza would certainly enhance our common strategic in-

While we take the initiative to protect these interests, we remain faithful to our Arab commitment. To us, this is a matter of destiny. Pursuing peace is the only avenue which is compatible with our culture and Let there be no more wars or bloodshed between Arabs and Israelis who lived together in peace and harmony for centuries. Let there be no more suffering or denial of rights. Let there be no more despair or loss of faith. Let no mother lament the loss of her child. Let no young man waste his life on a conflict from which no one benefits. Let us work together until the day comes when they beat their swords into ploughshares and their spears into pruning hooks. And God does call to the abode of peace. He does guide whom He pleases to His way.

"I stand before you in humility and in pride, as a son of the Jewish people who has lived through the holocaust and the redemption. I have come from the land of Israel, the land of Zion and Jerusalem.'

"The Prophet Isaiah said: 'Nations shall beat their swords into ploughshares and their spears into pruning hooks.

"Despite the tragedies and disappointments of the past, we must never forsake that vision, that human dream, that unshakable faith. "Peace is the beauty of life — it is sunshine, it is the smile of a child, the love of the mother, the joy of the father, the togetherness of a family. It is the advancement of men, the victory of a just cause, the triumph of right. Peace is all these and more. 'Five times in a single generation the sons of our two ancient nations met on the battlefield. That is the reason the signing of a peace treaty is a great day in the annals of Israel and Egypt. "This is a great day in the life of the President of the United States. You have worked so hard, so consistently, so devotedly to reach this goal and your labours have borne blessed fruit. 'President Sadat once said that you are an unknown soldier in the cause of peace. I agree, but as usual, with an amendment...Jimmy Carter, the President of the United States, is not completely unknown.

"President Sadat is a hero because he showed great civil courage in the face of adversity. Sometimes, civil courage is more notable than military courage. "I must admit that I, too, had to face adversity among my own people — even among my closest associates

— as I worked towards this peace

"I have witnessed three truly great days in my life. There was that day in May 1948 when, after 1878 years of dispersion, the Jewish people es-tablished the State of Israel. Then there was that day in June 1967 when Jerusalem was reunited. And there is this day, when I have the privilege to sign this treaty of peace between Israel and the Arab Republic of Egypt.
"No more bloodshed! No more war! No more bereavement! Shalom! Salaam! Peace.

"This is an appropriate time and place to bring back to memory the prayer of thanksgiving which I learn-ed as a child in the home of my mother and father...who perished in the holocaust for one reason only because they were Jews without a country of their own and an army to defend them...Though the Jews of Europe called for help, nobody answered their call...

"When the Lord brought back those...to Zion, We were like unto them that dream...The Lord bath done great things with us; we are rejoiced...They that sow in tears shall reap in joy. Though he goeth on his way weeping, he shall come home with joy.....

During the past 30 years, Israel and Egypt have waged war. For the past 16 months, these two great nations have waged peace. Today we celebrate victory — not of a bloody military campaign, but of an inspiring peace campaign. Two leaders who will loom large in the history of nations - Anwar al-Sadat and Menahem Begin - have conducted this campagin with all the courage, tenacity, brilliance and inspiration of any generals who ever led men and machines onto the field of battle. At the end of this campaign the soil of the two lands is not drenched with flowing blood. The countryside of both lands are free from the litter. and carnage of wasteful war. Mothers in Egypt and Israel are not weeping today for their children fallen in senseless battle. The dedication and determination of these two world statesmen have borne fruit. Peace has come.

I honour these two leaders and their government officials who have hammered out this peace treaty which we sign. But most of all I honour the people of these two lands whose yearning for peace kept alive the negotiations which teday. culminate in this glorious event.

We have won, at least, the first step of peace — a first step on a long and difficult road. We must not minimize the obstacles that lie ahead. Differences separate the signatories to this treaty from each other and also from some of their neighbours who fear what they have done. To overcome th differences, to dissect those & we must rededicate ourselves h goal of a broader peace with ju for all who have lived in a stal conflict in the Middle East. There remains the rest of the
